Gentlemen, hope all is well as we are in our first week of the off-season. Still some great golf weather this week!

Wanted to share a few things with you. First, the handicap link on the men's club site has been edited to include an additional option. Previously it linked to the handicap system to pull current indexes. However, with the system shut down for the season, that link no longer works. There is now a link for end of year indexes that you can access if you need them until the system opens back up again April 1st.

Second, scores from our off-season do not get entered into the handicap system, so don't hold onto any scores between now and April 1st from courses in our area to enter them once the system comes back up. The handicap committee will be reviewing any off-season entries next April. You should not be starting the season next year with a significantly higher handicap than what you ended the 2015 season at.

Third, I want to share this website with you for you to peruse at your convenience. It has a lot of great information about handicaps, and also some comical stuff as well. Be sure to check out the links on the left hand side for various pages, including the one labeled "odds of shooting an exceptional score" underneath the "dealing with sandbagging" link. It has a very informative table included.

Here's the address: <http://www.popeofslope.com/index.html>

Hope many of you are still able to get out and knock it around, if not for any other reason but to knock down some beers when you're through!
